1. About

I have always been a big fantasy buff, taking inspiration from everything from the likes of Tolkien to Pratchett, Martin to Sanderson and everyone else in between. I've played TTRPGs for half my life, innumerable systems, and always wanted to design one of my own. Stones, Scrolls, Swords, & Sorcery is far from my first job it — it is however the first large scale system I've tackled AND subsequently finished, and I could not be happier.

Stones, Scrolls, Swords & Sorcery started with a simple question: How do you make a TTRPG without dice?

The answer was already in everyone's hands. Rock–Paper–Scissors is universal, fast, and intuitive — but on its own, too simple. This system builds on that foundation, turning it into something deeper, where every throw carries tension, momentum, and narrative weight.

Inspired by systems I love — including Blades in the Dark and Stars Without Number — this game is designed to be easy to learn, quick to run, and flexible enough for both one-shots and long campaigns. All you really need to play is a character sheet.

A big part of this project was making the system easy to run online. With the help of some AI-assisted coding, I've included a custom Roll20 character sheet built specifically for Stones, Scrolls, Swords & Sorcery.

I hope you enjoy the system — and the world it was made to live in.

2. How to play

The core of the game revolves around 3 systems; STONES, SCROLLS, SWORDS; and SORCERY; All taking place within SCENES.

A. STONES, SCROLLS, SWORDS

Whenever a player attempts an action with an uncertain outcome, they make a Throw.

To do this:

- Choose a relevant Skill (see Skills, pg.x)
- Determine the associated Attribute (Stones, Scrolls, Swords, or Sorcery)
- Perform a contested Throw against the GM (or another player)

At the end of the Throw, you will produce an Outcome Number, which determines the result of the action.

Both contestants secretly choose Stones, Scrolls, or Swords, then reveal the choice simultaneously as a Throw.

- Stones beats Swords
- Swords beats Scrolls
- Scrolls beats Stones

Determining the Outcome Number

The final Outcome Number is built from four elements:

1. Attribute Modifier
2. Series Length
3. Throw Winner
4. Draw Break

1. Attribute Modifier

Each Skill is tied to one of the four Attributes (see Character Creation pg.x):

STONES, SCROLLS, SWORDS, OR SORCERY

- Attributes under normal conditions range from -3 to +3
- This value is added to the Outcome Number at the end

Modifiers also affect the length of the series:

- Negative modifier → Best of 1 (bo1)
- Positive modifier (0 is positive) → Best of 3 (bo3)

2. Series Length

A Throw is resolved as a series of Rock–Paper–Scissors rounds:

- Best of 1 (bo1)
- Best of 3 (bo3)
- Best of 5 (bo5)
- Proficiency with a Skill increases the series by one step (max bo5)

3. Throw Winner

After resolving the series:

- If the player wins, add +1 to the Outcome Number
- If the GM or opposing player wins, add -1 to the Outcome Number

A. Stones, Scrolls, Swords

4. Draw Break

If both sides choose the same option in a round, it is a draw:

- The round does not count toward the series
- Instead, track the number of draws and throw again

Each draw increases the intensity of the final result:

- If the player wins: +1 per draw
- If the player loses: -1 per draw

Example:

- 2 draws, player wins → +2
- 5 draws, player loses → -5

5. Examples

*Nathan wants to try shoot an enemy, they attempt to use the {Reflex} skill with no proficiency. They have a +1 in Swords for this throw making the series a bo3. The GM and Nathan then proceed to throw the following. Wins are denoted with a **

1. Nathan - Swords GM - Stones*
2. Nathan - Scrolls GM - Scrolls
3. Nathan - Stones* GM - Swords
4. Nathan - Swords* GM - Scrolls

Nathan ends up winning the series with 1 draw. So the outcome number is: Win +1, Draw Break +1, Mod +1 for a total of 3.

6. Results

Results of throws' outcome number is compared against the outcome table.

Outcome Table

Outcome	Result
+7 or higher	Great Success – You achieve exactly what you intended, with a great benefit or advantage for incredible results.
+5 to +6	Strong Success – You succeed and perform the skill with some benefit or advantage.
+3 to +4	Success – You succeed and that's that.
0 to +2	Partial Success – You get what you want, but something is reduced, delayed, or incomplete.
-1 to -2	Complication – You fail, but gain something useful, or the situation changes in your favour slightly.
-3 to -4	Failure – You fail, and the situation worsens.
-5 or 6	Strong Failure – You fail badly, and the GM introduces a significant consequence or escalation.
-7 or lower	Catastrophic Failure – You fail catastrophically, the situation could not go any worse.

B. Sorcery

Sorcery allows players to create and cast spells using Words of Power. There are no fixed spell lists. Instead, players build spells by combining words and resolving them through a Throw.

WORDS OF POWER

Throughout play, characters gain Words of Power (e.g. Blast, Bind, Smoke, Frog). Each word represents a concept that can be used in spellcasting.

- Words can be combined freely
- Players describe what they hope their spell will do.
- The GM adjudicates outcomes based on the Outcome, Words Used, and Intention.
- Once a Word of Power is used it is expended for the day. Abilities may grant you up to an additional 5 uses Maximum per day.
- If one or more sources give you access to the same word of power, gain an additional use instead.

Casting a Spell

To cast a spell:

1. Choose 1–3 Words of Power
2. Combine them into a spell (e.g. Frog Blast, Smoke Bind)
3. Describe the spell's intention
4. Resolve the action with a Throw using an appropriate Skill

What Skill to Use

While SPELLCRAFT and other Sorcery-based skills are the most common ways to cast spells, Words of Power can be used with any skill, as long as the player can justify how it applies.

Word Limits

The number of words used affects the scale of the spell:

1 Word → simple, focused

2 Words → stronger or more versatile

3 Words → large, complex, or risky

Spells may not use more than 3 Words of Power unless stated otherwise.

Resolving Sorcery

Sorcery is resolved like any other action using a Throw. The final Outcome Number determines how the spell manifests:

- High results → the spell works as intended, often with added effect
- Mid results → the spell works more or less as described by the player
- Low results → the spell misfires, weakens, or creates complications
- Negative results → the spell blows up in some unexpected fashion

Words define intent, not power.

The Throw determines the result.

B. Sorcery

Obtaining words of Power

Words of Power can be gained in many ways throughout play, though they are most often granted by a character's Archetype or Pathway. All archetypes have access to sorcery, but it manifests differently depending on their focus. More martial characters tend to express magic in grounded, physical ways, using words such as LEAP or PUNCH, while more arcane archetypes draw on stranger, less tangible forces. However the world of SSS&S is wrought with magic and players may find themselves learning new Words of Power simply by performing great feats or from ancient texts or having the word accidentally infused into them.

Combining Words of Power

When casting a spell, players are encouraged to combine their Words of Power into a phrase that sounds like a natural incantation.

To do this, you may add simple connecting words or change the tense of words using: “of”, “the”, “and”, “to”, “into”, “through”, “from”, “-ing”. “-tion”

Important

- Connecting words are purely flavour
- They do not add power or mechanical effect
- They do not count toward the number of Words used — only the original Words of Power determine what the spell can do.

Example Incantations

- Wind Freeze — Freezing Winds
- Step Dream — Step through Dreams
- Frost Chain Grasp — Grasp of the Frost Chain
- Fire Bind — Bind with Fire
- Fade Shadow — Fade into Shadow

B. Sorcery

Examples

The alley is tight, wet stone underfoot, walls closing in. Ahead, a guard steps into the gap, spear levelled. There's no way around him.

"Stop!" says the guard

Mara doesn't slow. "I'm not fighting him. I've got Smoke and Step — I want to cast Smoke Step using the SNEAK skill. Just... vanish and slip past him."

"SNEAK skill seems appropriate here." Agrees the GM.

Mara wins the bo3 with an outcome of +4.

The guard commits to a thrust — and the world bursts into smoke.

For a heartbeat, he's sure he had her.

Then nothing...

The smoke hangs in the air, curling and thinning, and Mara is already past him, boots hitting stone on the far side of the alley. She doesn't stop running. Behind her, the guard coughs, turning in place, trying to make sense of where she went. The magic worked, not perfectly, not invisibly but enough. And the drifting smoke might still tell someone which way she ran.

Nathan kneels in a chalk circle, words laid out before him: Bone Mirror's Call. He's attempting a RITUAL skill check.

"I'm trying to reach... whatever's on the other side."

The GM nods. "Make a Throw."

Hands clash. A loss. A draw. Another loss.

The outcome is not good, -2.

The circle flickers.

Nathan's finishes the incantation.

For a moment, the mirror answers.

Then it cracks.

Something pushes through—not fully, not clean—and the room bends with it. The chalk circle smears, the air turns cold, and Nathan is thrown back as something else takes hold of the space he opened.

It worked.

Just not the way he wanted.

C. Scenes

Play is divided into Scenes.

A Scene is a stretch of play focused on a single situation, location, or objective. It begins when something meaningful starts and ends when that situation is resolved, abandoned, or changes significantly. Scenes help organise play, track time, and manage abilities.

What is a Scene?

- A negotiation in a tavern
- A fight in a narrow alley
- A journey through a dangerous forest
- A ritual taking place over several minutes

If the focus shifts, the Scene changes.

Ending a Scene

A Scene ends when:

- The goal is achieved or fails
- The location or situation changes
- Time clearly passes (minutes → hours, etc.)
- The group moves on to something new

When in doubt, the GM decides.

Scene Effects

- Certain abilities, effects, or rules may last:
- For a Scene (until it ends)
- Once per Scene (usable once before the Scene ends)
- When the Scene ends, these reset or expire.

Guideline

If it feels like a new situation, it's a new Scene.

Don't overthink it — Scenes exist to keep play flowing, not to restrict it.

D. Sessions of Play

A Session of Play should aim to tell a complete and satisfying part of the story. While the wider campaign may continue for many sessions, each individual session should have a clear goal, objective, problem, or story beat that the players can meaningfully engage with and resolve.

This approach helps keep the game focused without railroading the players. The world remains open and reactive, but the scope of play is intentionally limited so that preparation remains manageable and players leave each session feeling like they accomplished something tangible.

A Session might revolve around:

- Investigating a murder
- Escaping a collapsing ruin
- Negotiating a dangerous alliance
- Hunting a monster
- Stealing a relic
- Surviving a journey
- Defending a settlement
- Tracking down a fugitive

During a single Session, characters may experience multiple Scenes, encounters, conflicts, conversations, rests, and periods of downtime. Significant amounts of in-world time may pass depending on the pacing and needs of the story.

By the end of a Session, players should usually have:

- Resolved or progressed a meaningful objective
- Changed the situation in some way
- Learned new information
- Created new problems, opportunities, or consequences

At the end of every Session, players gain Experience. This reward reflects not just victory, but participation in the unfolding story, overcoming adversity, pursuing goals, and shaping the world around them.

E. Combat & Consequences

Combat is fast, dangerous, and driven by the story rather than strict turn order. The goal is not to simulate every second of a fight, but to create dramatic moments of action, teamwork, improvisation, and consequence.

There is no initiative or fixed turn order. Instead, combat is divided into alternating Player Turns and GM Turns.

During a Player Turn, the players collectively decide the order in which they act. Each player may take 1 Scene Action. A Scene Action represents any meaningful contribution to the conflict, including:

- Attacking an enemy
- Casting a Sorcery
- Performing a complex manoeuvre
- Escaping danger
- Protecting an ally

Players are encouraged to work together. Multiple characters may combine their efforts into a single larger Scene Action when appropriate, especially for difficult manoeuvres, elaborate plans, or powerful combined Sorceries.

When a player fails a Throw, enemies may immediately respond depending on the Outcome and circumstances. This could include:

- Dealing Harm
- Repositioning
- Escalating the situation
- Applying pressure
- Creating new threats
- Interrupting actions
- Separating the group
- Destroying opportunities

Failure should move the scene forward, not stop it entirely.

E. Combat & Consequences

After all players have acted, the GM takes a Turn. During the GM Turn, enemies do not make ordinary attacks. Instead, they:

- Reposition
- Prepare traps or defences
- Retreat or pursue
- Escalate tension
- Reinforce allies
- Attempt healing
- Change the battlefield
- Most importantly Cast Sorceries

Enemy Sorcery should be deliberate and memorable. Most enemies only possess a handful of simple Words of Power, while truly powerful Sorceries should remain rare, dangerous, and narratively significant.

Most ordinary enemies can only withstand a small amount of Harm before being defeated. Important enemies, monsters, rivals, and major threats may possess full Harm Tracks similar to player characters.

Combat should always remain cinematic and expressive. Encourage players to describe how they fight, cast, move, and interact with the world. Reward creativity, bold ideas, and teamwork wherever possible.

Harm (see more pg.x)

Damage in Stones, Scrolls, Swords & Sorcery is represented through Harm. Harm reflects serious injuries, exhaustion, trauma, magical corruption, and other lasting consequences suffered during play.

Most ordinary enemies can only withstand a small amount of Harm before being defeated, while important characters and player characters possess full Harm Tracks.

When a character suffers Harm, the severity is determined by the fiction, the Outcome of the Throw, and the nature of the threat. Minor injuries may inflict Level 1 Harm, while devastating attacks, powerful Sorceries, or catastrophic failures may inflict Level 2 or Level 3 Harm. Harm is dangerous. Penalties stack quickly, recovery takes time, and a few bad decisions can rapidly spiral into disaster.

E. Combat & Consequences

When a player fails a Throw, the GM determines the consequences based on the Outcome of the Throw and the surrounding fiction. Consequences should move the story forward and reflect the severity of the failure.

Consequences may include:

- Harm
- Lost opportunities
- Escalation
- Broken equipment
- Enemy advantage
- Exposure
- Magical backlash
- Narrative complications

A minor failure may create pressure or setbacks, while a severe failure can drastically change the Scene. Failure should never stop the game — it should change the situation.

Resisting Consequences

After a consequence is declared, a player may choose to Resist it. To Resist, make a BO1 Throw with no modifiers. If you win the Throw, the consequence is reduced, avoided, or softened.

After a successful Resist, spend 1 Point.

If the Resist Throw fails, the original consequence occurs and the GM may escalate the situation further. A consequence may only be Resisted once.

Resisting Harm

When resisting Harm, the Harm is not usually avoided completely. Instead, it may:

- Be reduced by 1 Level
- Become superficial
- Affect equipment instead
- Create a lesser complication

Resistance represents a desperate effort to avoid the worst possible outcome.

F. Healing & Rest

Healing in Stones, Scrolls, Swords & Sorcery is intentionally abundant. Characters may go from battered and broken to back on their feet within the same Session through recovery, rest, Sorcery, and special abilities.

Healing is tracked through Recovery. Many abilities, Words of Power, and moments of rest allow characters to clear Recovery. When a character clears 6 total Recovery, all Harm Levels shift down by 1. See Page X for more information on Harm and Recovery.

Short Rest

A Short Rest represents a brief pause in the action where characters have a chance to recover, regroup, eat, patch wounds, or catch their breath.

During a Short Rest:

- Clear 1 Recovery
- Refresh up to 2 total uses of Words of Power

This may be:

- 2 uses of one Word of Power
- 1 use each of two different Words of Power

A Short Rest may only take a few minutes narratively, if the situation allows for it.

Long Rest

A Long Rest represents a significant period of downtime, such as a full night's sleep, extended relaxation, or meaningful recovery in safety.

During a Long Rest:

- Clear 3 Recovery
- Refresh all expended Words of Power

Characters are expected to eat, sleep, and properly recuperate during a Long Rest.

H. Travel & Money

Money

Money in Stones, Scrolls, Swords & Sorcery is intentionally abstracted. Wealth is measured in Coin, representing not only physical currency, but also favours, barter, supplies, valuables, and general purchasing power. Coin is not intended to track every individual expense. Instead, it represents meaningful spending and access to resources.

As a general guideline:

- 1 Coin covers modest food, drink, and lodging for a day
- 2 Coin covers comfortable or expensive living
- Rare equipment, magical items, bribes, transport, and services may cost significantly more Common or insignificant purchases usually do not require spending Coin unless scarcity, pressure, or circumstance makes them important. Characters are expected to spend Coin during downtime, travel, and recovery. Running low on Coin should create pressure and difficult decisions, not bookkeeping.

Travel

Travel should move the story forward, not slow it down. Most journeys can be resolved through a few meaningful Scenes, encounters, or Throws rather than tracking every mile travelled.

When travelling, the GM should focus on:

- | | |
|-------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| • Dangerous routes | • Weather and environmental hazards |
| • Difficult terrain | • Interesting discoveries |
| • Resource pressure | • Character interaction |
| • Unexpected encounters | • Story progression |

Safe or uneventful travel may pass quickly with little attention, while dangerous journeys may become major parts of a Session.

The purpose of travel is not realism, but pacing, atmosphere, and adventure.

3. Character Creation

Getting started in STONES, SCROLLS, SWORDS & SORCERY is quick and straightforward.

A character can be created in just a few minutes, and all the information you need fits on a single sheet.

At its core, character creation is about making a few meaningful choices:

- Who your character is
- What they're good at
- How they approach problems
- What kind of magic they can wield

From there, the rest of the game grows naturally through play.

You'll choose an Origin, then an Archetype, define your Pathway, assign your Attributes, and pick a handful of Words of Power and Abilities. As you play, your character will develop further by gaining experience, new abilities, and Words of Power.

Don't worry about getting everything perfect — the system is designed so that characters evolve quickly, and most of what makes them interesting will come from how you play them at the table.

A. Character Sheet Overview

a. Name

Your character's name. Simple as that.

b. Origin

Where your character comes from. This helps define their background, culture, and place in the world.

c. Level

Your character's current level. This tracks overall progression and growth.

d. Archetype

Your character's core role (e.g. Vanguard, Herald, Skirmisher, Mage). This shapes how they approach challenges.

e. Pathway

A more specific expression of your Archetype. Your Pathway defines your style and grants unique abilities.

f. Points

Used during character creation and play to increase attributes and unlock new abilities and words of power.

g. Attributes

Your core stats: Stones, Scrolls, Swords, and Sorcery. These influence Throws, determine series length, and modify outcomes.

h. Experience Track

Tracks your accumulated experience. When filled, you gain a level and a point. Experience should come fairly frequently.

i. Load Track

Represents how much your character is carrying. Heavier loads may limit what you can do.

j. Inventory

A list of the items your character is carrying.

k. Skills

Your areas of expertise. Skills determine how you approach actions and what Attribute you use when making Throws.

l. Harm

Tracks injuries and their severity. As Harm increases, your character becomes more vulnerable.

m. Abilities

Special features granted by your Archetype and Pathway. Abilities give you unique ways to influence the game.

n. Words of Power

Your collection of magical words. These are used to create and cast spells through Sorcery.

B. Character Sheet Specifics

a. Name

A character's name matters.

Words of Power can come from many sources, and names are no exception. While your name does not grant you any inherent magical ability, it can still carry meaning — and meaning has power.

Others may use your name in spells, rituals, or stories, and the significance you give it can shape how it exists in the world.

Players are encouraged to choose names with intention — whether serious, symbolic, or even comedic. If it matters to you, it can matter in the fiction.

b. Origin

Origins come in two forms, and you choose two total during character creation:

- Background — where you were raised, or the environment that shaped you
- Profession — what you did before becoming an adventurer

Together, your Origins help define who your character is, what they know, and how they see the world.

Origins grant you access to unique Abilities, Words of Power or Items.

Unlike many other systems, your background is not tied to race. In fact, your character's species has no mechanical impact on play.

You're free to choose whatever fantastical species you like—just check with your GM first to make sure it fits the setting.

Your character is assumed to be competent in areas related to their Origins.

The player can avoid trying for Throws for simple or routine tasks that fall within that experience. Throws are only needed when the outcome is uncertain, risky, or contested.

c. Level

Levels have limited mechanical impact. Their primary purpose is to track your character's overall progression.

Some abilities may be locked behind level requirements, but for the most part, your character grows through play rather than through level-based scaling.

When your character level's up they are rewarded 5 Points.

B. Character Sheet Specifics

d. Archetypes

There are four Archetypes: THE VANGUARD, THE HERALD, THE ADEPT, and THE MAGE. Each represents a different approach to the core Attributes, and helps define how your character engages with the world.

Your Archetype primarily shapes your style of play. While these roles may resemble familiar archetypes from other systems, each is further refined through its Pathways, which provide more specific expressions of that role.

When you choose an Archetype, you gain access to its full list of abilities. At character creation, you select one to start with. As you level up, you'll unlock and learn the rest through play.

e. Pathways

Each Archetype is divided into four Pathways, representing different expressions of that role through the core Attributes.

When you choose a Pathway, you define how your character approaches challenges and where their strengths lie. While your Archetype sets your overall style, your Pathway refines it into something more specific.

Pathways also grant unique abilities, giving you distinct tools and ways to influence the game. At character creation, you select one to start with. As you level up, you'll unlock and learn the rest through play.

f. Points

When you level up, you gain 5 Points. These can be spent to improve your character in a few key ways.

You may spend Points on:

- Increase an Attribute — 5 Points

Raise one of your Attributes (Stones, Scrolls, Swords, or Sorcery)

- Gain a new Ability — 2 Points

Learn a new ability from any one of your sources

- Learn a new Word of Power — 2 Points

Add a new word to your collection for use in Sorcery

- Gain a new Ability From another Source — 3 Points

Learn a new ability from any source other than your Archetype or Pathway.

B. Character Sheet Specifics

g. Attributes

Attributes represent the core ways your character interacts with the world. Each one influences your Throws, determines how you approach problems, and shapes your Pathway.

Unless otherwise stated, Attributes range from -3 to +3, with all Attributes starting at -3.

During character creation, you are given a pool of Points which can be spent to increase your Attributes as you choose.

Stones

STRENGTH, ENDURANCE, AND PHYSICAL PRESENCE.

Stones governs feats of force and resilience — breaking obstacles, withstanding harm, and holding your ground.

Scrolls

KNOWLEDGE, AWARENESS, AND SOCIAL INFLUENCE.

Scrolls covers understanding and communication — reading situations, persuading others, and applying learned insight.

Swords

SPEED, PRECISION, AND ACTION.

Swords represents agility and decisive movement — striking quickly, reacting in the moment, and executing actions with accuracy.

Sorcery

MAGIC, INTUITION, AND THE UNKNOWN.

Sorcery governs your connection to the arcane — shaping spells, resisting magical effects, and interacting with forces beyond the mundane.

h. Experience Track

The Experience Track is filled at the end of each session, marking each time you gain XP. You can earn XP for any of the following reasons, up to twice per session.

- Pursued your character's identity, You acted in line with your Archetype, Pathway, or Origins.
- Overcame a meaningful challenge, You contributed to resolving a difficult obstacle, conflict, or situation.
- Used Sorcery in an interesting way You cast a spell that was creative, risky, or had a notable impact on the scene.
- Accepted a setback or complication, You leaned into failure, consequences, or made things worse in a way that added to the story.

B. Character Sheet Specifics

i. Load Track

A blank character sheet starts with 10 Load slots. Certain abilities, Words of Power, or magical items may increase this.

Load represents how much space an item takes up. Each item occupies Load based on its size, weight, or awkwardness:

- Small items typically take 1 Load
- Larger or bulkier items may take 2 or more Load

Basic items your character would reasonably carry do not take up Load. Only items of purpose, value, or significance count — such as rope, tools, weapons, or enchanted items.

If an item would meaningfully affect what you can carry or use, it should take up Load.

Using Load in Play

At the start of a session, you are not assumed to be carrying everything in your Inventory.

Instead, you declare items as you need them during play. When you do, that item is considered to have been on your character all along and is added to your Load.

Limits

When your Load Track is full, the GM may rule that excessive or cumbersome Load hinders your movement, actions, or ability to perform certain tasks, applying penalties to Outcome scores.

j. Inventory

When you add an item to your Inventory, record what it is and how much Load it takes.

There is no fixed list for item Load. Use your best judgement, with the GM having final say where needed.

While you are not assumed to be carrying every item in your Inventory at all times, you should still consider where those items are kept when they're not on your person.

There is a reason your character can only carry so much.

Your equipment might be stored in a chest on a cart, kept at a base or stronghold, or left somewhere safe between journeys. Where your items are matters, and retrieving them may not always be immediate or easy.

B. Character Sheet Specifics

k. Skills

Skills are the primary way players interact with the story.

When a player takes action, they first describe what their character does in the fiction. They then choose a Skill that best reflects how they are approaching the situation. Different approaches may use different Skills, even when facing the same problem.

Throws are only made when the outcome is uncertain or when the result could meaningfully affect the story. They are always tied to a Skill. Players choose which Skill to use, but it must make sense for the action being described. The GM may ask for clarification, suggest alternatives, or call for a Throw when the situation demands it.

Each of the four primary Attributes has four Skills associated with it, though Archetypes and Pathways may alter or expand these options.

Characters can become proficient in a skill. This is marked with the box top left of the skill. A proficient skill means throwing one series higher than its attribute modifier suggests; up to a maximum of Best of 5.

Stones Skills

Athletics

MOVEMENT, CLIMBING, AND PHYSICAL EXERTION.

Use Athletics when you run, jump, climb, swim, or otherwise push your body to overcome physical obstacles.

Use Might when you lift, break, strike, or apply raw strength to overcome something in your way.

UNPREDICTABLE, UNSTABLE, AND UNKNOWN MAGIC.

Use Weird when you interact with strange forces, push beyond safe limits, or deal with magic that behaves in unexpected or unnatural ways.

1. Harm

Harm represents injury, strain, and lasting damage your character suffers.

Harm is tracked using:

- Injury Levels (what kind of harm you have)
- Harm Track (6 pips) (your recovery progress)

Injury Levels

There are four levels of Harm:

- Level 1 (Minor) — 1 Less Maximum Load per injury
- Level 2 (Moderate) — -1 To Outcome per injury
- Level 3 (Severe) — 1 Series Lower (bo5 → bo3 → bo1 → bo1)
- Level 4 (Death) — Character Death

If all boxes of harm are filled for any given level, any subsequent injury regardless of severity is the next level up.

When recording harm write the injury in the box.

Harm Track

Your Harm Track has 6 pips.

This track fills as you recover, not when you take damage.

B. Character Sheet Specifics

Recovering Harm

When you receive care, rest, or magical healing, mark pips on the Harm Track.

When the track is filled:

Clear all pips

All Harm shifts down one level:

- Level 3 → Level 2
- Level 2 → Level 1
- Level 1 → cleared

This represents your injuries gradually improving over time.

m. Abilities

Abilities are special features that define what your character can do beyond basic actions. They are gained through your Archetype, Pathway, and advancement. Each Ability on your sheet has four parts:

Name

The title of the Ability.

This should be short and distinctive, giving a clear sense of what the Ability does.

Source

Where the Ability comes from.

This is usually your Archetype or Pathway, but may also come from other features, items, or effects gained during play.

Description

What the Ability does.

This explains the mechanical effect and how it interacts with the game. Abilities may modify Throws, alter outcomes, grant new options, or change how you approach situations.

Tick Mark

Indicates whether you have learned the Ability.

- Unticked = not yet learned
- Ticked = active and available to use

n. Words of Power

This section tracks the Words of Power your character knows.

Each entry represents a single Word. Write the name of the Word on the line provided.

- Each Word is recorded individually
- Tick the box to indicate the Word has been expended for the scene
- New Words can be added as you gain them through play

Use this section as a reference when forming spells during play.

C. Creating a Character

Here we go over the steps to create a character in SSS&S. If there is a chapter that the player should read its this one!

A Level 1 character will start with:

- 2 Item Sets
- 5 Abilities
- 6 Words of Power
- 10 Distributed Attribute Points
- 1 - 2 Skill Proficiencies
- 0 - 1 Bonus Attribute Bonus.

1. Name

Creating a character starts with a name.

You are free to play any fantasy species you like, as long as it fits the setting and your GM approves. Species has no mechanical impact in SSS&S.

2. Origins

Next, choose your Origins.

There are two types of Origins:

- Background (where you come from)
- Profession (what you did before adventuring)

You may take one of each, or two of the same type — whichever best suits your character.

From your Origins, record any granted Items, Abilities, and Words of Power in the appropriate sections of your sheet.

3. Archetype

Choose one of the four Archetypes.

Your Archetype grants access to a selection of Abilities, and Words of Power. From these, choose:

- 1 Ability
- 2 Word of Power
- 1 Skill to Become Proficient In

4. Pathway

Choose your Pathway. This refines your Archetype and helps actualise your preferred playstyle. Pathways grant you access to more unique Abilities, and Words of Power.

When you choose a Pathway:

- Gain +1 Attribute point to either your Archetype's primary Attribute or your Pathway's secondary Attribute.
- Choose:
 - 2 Abilities
 - 2 Word of Power

C. Creating a Character

5. Attributes

When creating a new character, Attributes use a point-buy system.

- All Attributes start at -3
- You have 10 Distribution Points to allocate (worth 50 points total)
- Attributes can be increased up to a maximum of +3 by player advancement

Use the track markers to allocate points and record your final value in the main box.

Advancing your attributes further requires 5 Points, which are awarded from levelling up.

6. Starting at Higher Levels

If starting above level 1, follow all previous steps as normal.

Then gain additional Points equal to:

- 3 Points per level above 1

You may spend these Points as normal.

The GM may also allow players to start with an additional Word of Power for every 2 levels above 1.

7. Backstory

While not required, players are encouraged to write a backstory for their character. SSS&S is a narrative-focused game that emphasises collaborative storytelling and worldbuilding. A backstory helps ground your character in the world and gives the GM material to build on during play.

Your backstory doesn't need to be long — a few key details are enough:

- Where you came from
- What you've done
- What you want

We also encourage players to define a few connections their character has within the world. These can be both positive and negative — allies, mentors, rivals, enemies, or people you owe.

Connections help ground your character in the setting and give the GM hooks to bring into play. They don't need to be detailed; a name and a short note is enough. Like your backstory, these are starting points that can develop naturally over time.

Use it as a foundation, not a restriction. Your character will grow and change through play.

4. Origins

Your Origins define where your character comes from and what shaped them before play begins. Each character has two Origins, chosen from Backgrounds (how you were raised) and Professions (what you did). You may take one of each, or two of the same type.

Origins provide your starting Items, Abilities, and Words of Power, and help establish your place in the world. Each one lends itself to creating a unique fantasy specific to your character!

Together, your Origins answer two simple questions:
Where are you from? and What did you do?.

5. Archetypes

Your character is defined first by their Archetype — a broad expression of how they approach the world, solve problems, and act under pressure. An Archetype is not a rigid class or restriction, but a reflection of your character's natural tendencies and strengths. Two characters may share the same Archetype and still feel entirely different in play, as it sets a foundation rather than a limit.

Each Archetype aligns with one of the four primary Attributes — Stones, Scrolls, Swords, or Sorcery — and represents a dominant way of engaging with challenges. A Vanguard may rely on presence and force, a Herald on influence and connection, an Adept on instinct and adaptability, and a Mage on shaping the arcane. These are lenses through which your character interacts with the world, not boundaries that confine them.

Where Archetypes define your foundation, Pathways define your direction. A Pathway represents the specific way your character has refined their skills, beliefs, or methods, sharpening your identity and ensuring that even characters with the same Archetype diverge quickly in how they act, what they value, and how they solve problems.

Each Pathway draws on a secondary Attribute, creating a blend of strengths that further distinguishes your character. Together, Archetype and Pathway shape your Abilities and starting Words of Power, guiding your playstyle without restricting what you can attempt.

A. The Vanguard

WHERE OTHERS ADAPT OR INFLUENCE, THE VANGUARD ENDURES AND OVERCOMES.

The Vanguard stands at the front — not just in battle, but in any moment where force, presence, or resolve is required. They are the ones who step forward when something must be done, when hesitation would cost too much, or when no one else is willing to take the weight of a situation onto themselves.

Defined by Stones, the Vanguard approaches problems directly. They do not circle, bargain, or wait for the perfect moment. They endure, they push, and when needed, they break through whatever stands in their way. That strength may come from physical power, unshakable will, or sheer stubborn determination, but all Vanguards share the same core truth — they do not yield.

A Vanguard is not simply a fighter. They are the one who holds the line when others would falter, who carries the burden when it becomes too much, and who acts when the moment demands it. They are often the first to step forward and the last to fall back, standing firm in the face of pressure, danger, or uncertainty. Where others look for alternatives, the Vanguard commits.

In play, a Vanguard thrives in situations where pressure is high and consequences are immediate. They excel at taking decisive action, absorbing setbacks, and forcing progress through obstacles that would stall others. They create momentum through presence alone, turning resistance into something to be overcome rather than avoided.

To play a Vanguard is to accept that not every problem has a clever solution. Sometimes the only path forward is to stand your ground, push through, and refuse to be stopped — no matter the cost.

a. Stone Guard

YOU FEEL NO PAIN — YOU MAKE OTHERS FEEL IT.

Where others train, study, or refine their abilities, the Stone Guard draws strength from something older and more instinctive. Their power is not taught; it is lived. It comes from the land beneath their feet, the air in their lungs, and the unbreakable rhythm of the natural world. To a Stone Guard, strength is not a tool—it is a state of being.

Aligned with Stones, they embody raw, grounded power. Their movements are heavy, deliberate, and inevitable, like shifting earth or crashing waves. They endure not because they resist the world, but because they move with it, absorbing force and returning it in kind. Pain, exhaustion, and hardship are not obstacles to them—they are part of the path.

Stone Guards are often seen as barbarians or wild warriors, but this misses the truth. They are deeply in tune with their surroundings, reading terrain, weather, and movement with instinctive clarity. They know when to stand firm, when to advance, and when to let momentum carry them forward. Their strength is as much about presence and awareness as it is about force.

In play, a Stone Guard thrives in moments of pressure and chaos. They excel at holding ground, pushing through opposition, and turning raw physicality into overwhelming advantage. Where others hesitate, they act. Where others break, they endure.

To play a Stone Guard is to trust your body, your instincts, and the world around you—because when everything else falls away, those are the only things that remain.

b. War Scholar

WAR SCHOLARS DO NOT RELY ON STRENGTH ALONE — THEY WIN
THROUGH POSITION, TIMING, AND CONTROL.

A War Scholar sees the battlefield as more than chaos. Every movement, every strike, every hesitation has meaning. Where others react, the War Scholar anticipates. Where others fight alone, they fight as part of something larger.

Blending physical presence with tactical insight, the War Scholar stands at the centre of the fight, directing its flow. They shift allies into advantage, exploit openings as they appear, and ensure that no action is wasted. Whether from the ground or mounted above it, they maintain control, turning scattered effort into coordinated force.

A War Scholar is not the strongest combatant, nor the fastest, but they do not need to be. They win by making every moment count — placing allies where they need to be, striking when it matters most, and ensuring that the battle unfolds on their terms.

In play, a War Scholar thrives on coordination and awareness. They excel at positioning, supporting allies, and shaping the outcome of a fight before it is decided. Where a Stone Guard endures and a Brawler overwhelms, the War Scholar ensures victory was inevitable from the start.

c. Bare Brawler

BARE BRAWLERS DO NOT RELY ON WEAPONS — THEY ARE THE WEAPON.

Where others train with blade or shield, the Bare Brawler sharpens their own body into something just as deadly. Every strike is direct, every movement purposeful, every moment of contact an opportunity to overwhelm. They fight up close, fast and relentless, turning even the smallest opening into a decisive advantage.

A Bare Brawler thrives in the chaos of a fight. They do not wait for perfect conditions or careful setup — they create momentum through pressure, chaining blows together and forcing opponents onto the back foot. Draws, clashes, and scrambles are not setbacks, but fuel for their next strike.

They are as much presence as they are fighter. Confidence, grit, and sheer stubbornness carry them through, whether shrugging off punishment or standing toe-to-toe with something far larger than themselves. Some fight with discipline and precision, others with raw aggression, but all share the same core truth: once they're in reach, the fight is already theirs.

In play, a Bare Brawler excels at sustained pressure and close-quarters dominance. They reward aggressive play, quick follow-ups, and capitalising on momentum, turning small advantages into overwhelming force in seconds.

d. Rune Breaker

POWER IS NOT LEARNED — IT IS CARVED INTO THE WORLD.

Rune Breakers wield ancient power bound into physical form. Through carved sigils, etched symbols, and marked objects, they trap Words of Power inside Runes and unleash them through force, ritual, or destruction. To a Rune Breaker, magic is not fleeting or abstract—it is something tangible, something that can be held in the hand, hammered into steel, carved into bone, or burned into flesh.

Aligned with Stones and Sorcery, Rune Breakers stand between the physical and the arcane. They combine raw endurance and primal strength with old magical practices rooted in symbols, curses, and the hidden language of the world. Their magic is deliberate and heavy, often lingering long after it has been invoked.

Many Rune Breakers learn their craft through isolated traditions, ancient clans, or forbidden rites passed down through scars, tattoos, relics, and oral teachings. Some are wandering occult smiths, others hunters of monsters and curses, and some become something stranger still—marked by moonlight, blood, or bestial transformation.

In play, Rune Breakers excel at preparation, delayed power, and magical versatility. They create Runes ahead of time, store effects within them, and unleash them when the moment is right. Their abilities often blend physicality with magic, allowing them to endure punishment while shaping the battlefield through cursed objects, protective sigils, and volatile magical effects.

To play a Rune Breaker is to treat magic as something real and weighty—etched into stone, carried on the body, and broken open only when needed.

B. The Herald

YOU DON'T WIN ALONE—YOU MAKE OTHERS WIN WITH YOU.

Those who walk the path of the Herald do not act for themselves alone. Where others pursue personal strength or mastery, the Herald looks outward—toward people, communities, and the spaces between them. They measure success not by what they achieve in isolation, but by how many others they can uplift, guide, or bring forward with them.

Aligned with Scrolls, the Herald understands that influence is a force as real as steel or sorcery. A well-placed word, a timely gesture, or a shared belief can shift the course of events just as surely as any weapon. Heralds work through trust, presence, and connection, navigating social spaces with the same precision others bring to combat or magic.

This does not make them passive. A Herald is often the one who speaks first, who steps between conflict, or who rallies others when things begin to falter. They open doors that would otherwise remain closed, create opportunities where none seemed to exist, and ensure that the right people are in the right place at the right time. Where a Vanguard pushes forward and a Mage reshapes reality, the Herald reshapes the situation itself.

In play, a Herald thrives wherever people matter—negotiation, coordination, deception, leadership, or performance. They excel at turning individuals into allies and moments into movements, leveraging relationships and social leverage to achieve results that others cannot reach alone.

To play a Herald is to recognise that true power is not just what you can do, but what you can make possible for everyone else.

a. Scroll Wright

SCROLLWRIGHTS BELIEVE THERE IS NO PROBLEM THAT CANNOT BE SOLVED WITH ENOUGH NOTES.

They are inventors, archivists, and relentless planners — the kind of people who fill journals faster than most can read them. Every diagram, annotation, and scribbled margin note is another piece of understanding, another solution waiting for the right moment.

A Scrollwright approaches magic like a mechanism to be studied, catalogued, and improved. They build strange devices, prepare obscure tools, and carry enough plans, blueprints, and half-finished ideas to solve problems nobody else saw coming. Where other mages rely on instinct or raw power, the Scrollwright relies on preparation.

Their creations are rarely elegant. A Scrollwright's work is often patched together from spare parts, experimental runes, and dangerous assumptions, but somehow it functions exactly when needed most. Given enough time, they can prepare for almost anything.

In play, a Scrollwright excels at preparation, utility, and magical invention. They create tools and contraptions, store knowledge for later use, and solve problems through planning, ingenuity, and careful documentation rather than overwhelming force.

h. Standard Bearer

LIGHT BRINGERS STAND BETWEEN OTHERS AND THE DARK.

They are not subtle. Where they go, the light follows — in word, in presence, in power. Wounds close beneath their hands, fear recedes, and things that lurk in shadow are forced into the open. They are a point of certainty in uncertain places.

A Light Bringer does not simply heal; they protect, guide, and judge. Their power comes from faith, conviction, or something greater that answers when they call. Some act as gentle shepherds, others as burning beacons, but all carry the same truth: the light is not passive — it pushes back.

They are often the centre others gather around. In the thick of danger, they hold the line, keeping allies standing and enemies from pressing too far. When darkness takes hold, they do not retreat — they step forward and make it yield.

In play, a Light Bringer excels at protection, restoration, and control over hostile forces. They keep allies in the fight, deny enemies their momentum, and ensure that when things look worst, there is still something pushing back.

c. Silver Tongue

WORDS ARE YOUR WEAPON — AND YOU NEVER MISS.

A Silver Tongue doesn't need strength or steel. They change outcomes by changing minds. A lie becomes truth if it lands well enough. A speech can turn a crowd. A single sentence, said at the right moment, can end a fight before it starts.

They are quick, adaptable, and always in control of the conversation. Whether deceiving, inspiring, or informing, they know exactly what to say and when to say it. People listen — sometimes because they want to, sometimes because they don't realise they have a choice.

Some Silver Tongues build trust and lead from the front. Others manipulate, misdirect, and pull strings from the shadows. Either way, the result is the same: once they've spoken, the situation has already shifted.

In play, a Silver Tongue excels at influence, deception, and control. They shape decisions, redirect attention, and turn words into action — often before anyone realises what just happened.

C. The Adept

YOU DON'T OVERPOWER THE WORLD — YOU OUTMANOEUVRE IT.

Those who follow the path of the Adept rely on instinct, precision, and adaptability. Where others commit to force or influence, the Adept moves through problems at an angle—finding the gap, the weakness, or the moment that others miss

Aligned with Swords, the Adept understands that success rarely comes from meeting a challenge head-on. Instead, they shift, react, and exploit. They read situations quickly, adjust their approach, and act with intent. Whether through agility, awareness, or sheer streetwise instinct, an Adept is always looking for the smarter path forward.

An Adept is not defined by a single role. They may be a scout, a duelist, a hunter, or something harder to define entirely. What unites them is a reliance on skill over strength, timing over power, and instinct over planning. They do not need to control a situation—they simply need to be one step ahead of it.

In play, an Adept thrives in moments of movement, uncertainty, and pressure. They excel at repositioning, slipping past obstacles, reading people, and capitalising on fleeting opportunities. Where a Vanguard forces the issue and a Herald reshapes the situation, the Adept finds the opening and takes it.

To play an Adept is to trust your instincts, act decisively, and always look for the path others failed to see.

a. Sword Master

SWORD MASTERS DON'T SWING WILDLY — THEY DECIDE WHERE THE FIGHT ENDS.

Every movement is deliberate. Every strike is placed. Where others rely on strength or speed alone, the Sword Master relies on control — of distance, of timing, of the moment itself. They don't waste motion, and they don't miss without learning why.

A Sword Master studies the craft, whether through discipline, experience, or instinct refined into precision. They understand weapons not just as tools, but as extensions of intent. In their hands, even a simple blade becomes something exacting, capable of turning a single opening into a decisive finish.

They adapt their style to the situation. A duel, a skirmish, a chaotic melee — it doesn't matter. They find rhythm in the fight, read their opponent, and exploit mistakes with clean efficiency. Where others overpower or outlast, the Sword Master outplays.

In play, a Sword Master excels at precision, technique, and control. They reward careful timing, strong positioning, and smart decision-making, turning small advantages into clean, decisive victories.

h. Trail Blazer

TRAILBLAZERS DON'T FOLLOW PATHS — THEY MAKE THEM.

Where others see obstacles, the Trailblazer sees routes. They move through the world with instinct and confidence, cutting across terrain, navigating the wilds, and finding ways forward where none should exist. Whether crossing deserts, forests, mountains, or something far stranger, they are always one step ahead.

They are rarely alone. Beasts answer their call, paths reveal themselves underfoot, and the land itself seems to shift in their favour. Some Trailblazers form bonds with animals, others command them outright, but all share a connection to the untamed world that lets them move through it without hesitation.

A Trailblazer doesn't just survive the wild — they master it. They guide others, lead the way, and ensure that no terrain, no distance, and no pursuit can truly slow them down. If there is a way through, they will find it. If there isn't, they will make one.

In play, a Trailblazer excels at movement, exploration, and control of terrain. They bypass obstacles, support allies through difficult environments, and use beasts and positioning to stay ahead of any threat.

c. Street Sleuth

STREET SLEUTHS DON'T GUESS — THEY KNOW.

Nothing stays hidden for long. A Street Sleuth reads the small things: a glance held too long, a footprint where it shouldn't be, a story that doesn't quite line up. Where others see noise, they see patterns. Where others move on, they stop and look closer.

They work in the gaps — between truth and lie, between what's said and what's meant. Whether tracking someone through a crowded street or pulling a secret from a reluctant tongue, they always find the thread and follow it to the end.

A Street Sleuth builds a picture piece by piece, turning fragments into certainty. Once they have enough, the outcome stops being a question. It becomes inevitable.

In play, a Street Sleuth excels at uncovering information, following leads, and exposing weaknesses. They control the flow of knowledge in a scene, ensuring that when it matters, they already know more than anyone else.

d. Spell Thief

WHY MASTER YOUR OWN MAGIC WHEN YOU CAN TAKE EVERYONE ELSE'S?

Where most mages spend years refining a craft or memorising ancient teachings, the Spell Thief survives through instinct, adaptation, and audacity. They watch how others wield Sorcery, pull apart the patterns beneath it, and twist those same forces for themselves. To a Spell Thief, no spell is sacred, no magical tradition untouchable.

Aligned with Scrolls and Sorcery, Spell Thieves excel at manipulation, improvisation, and magical opportunism. They thrive in the space between disciplines, stealing fragments of power, repurposing enemy Sorceries, and turning a foe's greatest strength against them. Their magic is quick, clever, and often unpredictable, relying less on raw power and more on timing and understanding.

Many Spell Thieves are former apprentices, occult criminals, scavengers of forbidden knowledge, or survivors forced to learn magic however they could. Some copy spells through observation alone, while others literally steal magical texts, artifacts, or Words of Power from rival casters. Over time, many develop a reputation as dangerous nuisances—mages who cannot be trusted near a ritual circle, spellbook, or enchanted relic.

In play, a Spell Thief excels at disruption and adaptation. They are at their strongest when reacting to other magic users, altering Sorceries in motion, borrowing powers temporarily, and exploiting magical weaknesses others overlook. A Spell Thief rarely wins through overwhelming force alone—they win by making sure the enemy never gets to use their own power safely.

To play a Spell Thief is to be cunning, reactive, and fearless in the face of magic. Every spell cast near you is an opportunity.

D. The Mage

YOU DON'T FACE THE WORLD—YOU RESHAPE IT.

Those who walk the path of the Mage do not rely on strength, instinct, or influence alone. They bend the rules of reality itself, shaping the world through Words of Power and the forces that lie beneath it.

Aligned with Sorcery, the Mage understands that the world is not fixed—it is something that can be altered, rewritten, and reimaged. Where others work within limits, the Mage pushes beyond them, combining words, intent, and will to create effects that should not be possible.

A Mage is not defined by raw power, but by how they wield it. Some channel destructive force, others manipulate space, time, or form, and some work through careful ritual and precision. What unites them is the ability to turn thought into action in ways that defy expectation. Magic is not simply a tool—it is a language, and the Mage is fluent in it.

In play, a Mage thrives on creativity and flexibility. They excel at solving problems in unexpected ways, combining Words of Power to produce unique outcomes, and adapting their approach to suit the situation. Where a Vanguard overcomes, a Herald connects, and an Adept exploits, the Mage redefines what is possible.

To play a Mage is to think beyond the obvious, experiment with the unknown, and accept that with great power comes both opportunity and consequence.

a. Sorcery Slinger

SORCERY SLINGERS DON'T STUDY MAGIC — THEY BECOME IT

Where other mages refine, prepare, and deliberate, the Sorcery Slinger casts first and deals with the consequences later. Raw magical power flows through them faster than thought, shaped by instinct, force of will, and reckless confidence. Their Sorceries are loud, volatile, and rarely subtle.

A Sorcery Slinger thrives in motion. They chain spells together, overload Words of Power, and push magic far beyond what most would consider safe. Sparks dance across their fingertips, reality bends around them, and every fight risks becoming something far larger than it should have been.

Some are gifted prodigies, others self-taught disasters held together by momentum and ego, but all share the same dangerous truth: they can produce more magic, more quickly, than almost anyone else alive.

In play, a Sorcery Slinger excels at aggressive casting, overwhelming magical output, and adapting Sorcery on the fly. They reward creative combinations, rapid spell use, and pushing magical power to its absolute limit.

h. Grove Shaper

GROVE SHAPERS DON'T CONTROL NATURE — THEY GROW WITH IT.

Where others bend the world to their will, the Grove Shaper works with it. Life answers them. Roots shift, branches reach, water flows, and wind carries their intent. They don't force change — they encourage it, guiding the natural world into motion.

A Grove Shaper is never truly alone. The land listens. The smallest seed can become shelter, a weapon, or a lifeline given time and care. In the chaos of a fight, they turn open ground into living terrain, shaping space, protecting allies, and closing paths to their enemies.

They understand cycles — growth, decay, and renewal. Where something falls, something else rises. Wounds close, ground recovers, and even in death, life finds a way back.

In play, a Grove Shaper excels at shaping the battlefield, sustaining allies, and using the environment as both tool and ally. They reward patience, positioning, and awareness, turning the natural world into a constant, living advantage.

c. Spell Scribe

SPELL SCRIBES DO NOT SIMPLY CAST MAGIC — THEY UNDERSTAND IT, RECORD IT, AND RESHAPE IT.

Where other mages wield Words of Power in the moment, a Spell Scribe treats magic as something that can be studied, written, and controlled. They see the structure behind a Sorcery, recognising how it is formed, where it comes from, and how it might fail. To a Spell Scribe, magic is not fleeting — it is something that can be preserved, shared, and altered.

Their strength lies in preparation and precision. They inscribe Words onto objects, store spells for later use, and even allow others to wield magic through their work. As they grow in mastery, they begin to manipulate Sorcery itself — rewriting the Words within it, substituting elements, or stripping it apart entirely.

A Spell Scribe thrives in moments where knowledge and control matter more than raw power. They are planners, archivists, and manipulators of the arcane, capable of turning magic into a tool that extends beyond the caster.

In play, a Spell Scribe rewards foresight and creativity. Their abilities allow them to bend the normal flow of magic, giving them influence not just over their own spells, but over the magic of others.

d. Pact Binder

PACT BINDERS WERE NEVER GIVEN THEIR POWER — THEY MADE A DEAL FOR IT.

Where other mages study and refine, the Pact Binder bargains. Their magic comes from promises whispered in the dark, ancient entities beyond understanding, or forces willing to lend power for a price. Every spell carries intent. Every favour carries consequence.

A Pact Binder understands that power is transactional. Knowledge, protection, secrets, even pieces of the soul — everything has value to someone. They weave bindings, invoke obligations, and manipulate the unseen rules that govern promises and debts. Some serve willingly. Others believe they are clever enough to stay ahead of whatever answered them.

Their magic is instinctive, strange, and deeply personal. It slips through cracks, twists around rules, and lingers long after it should fade. A Pact Binder rarely casts openly when subtlety will suffice, preferring influence, leverage, and carefully chosen words over brute force.

In play, a Pact Binder excels at manipulation, reactive Sorcery, and occult utility. They turn bargains into weapons, redirect magical power, and exploit opportunities others never notice, thriving wherever there are secrets to trade or debts to collect.

6. Magical Items

One of the greatest joys of fantasy is magical items — especially the strange, unnecessary, and questionably useful ones. There is something deeply entertaining about wandering through a market stall and spending hard-earned Coin on an object that is either completely useless or only useful in an incredibly specific situation. Frankly, the same applies in real life.

Not every magical item needs to be legendary, powerful, or game-changing. Some exist simply because somebody thought they were a good idea at the time. Others are impractical curiosities, niche tools, failed inventions, or bizarre arcane novelties that somehow found their way into circulation.

This section contains magical items of all kinds, ranging from genuinely powerful artefacts to completely ridiculous nonsense. Some may save a life. Others may only exist to make your players laugh. Ideally, many will accomplish both.

Running the Game

The GM's role in Stones, Scrolls, Swords & Sorcery is to present the world, portray its dangers and inhabitants, and respond honestly to the players' actions. You are not responsible for controlling the story or forcing players toward specific outcomes. Instead, your job is to create situations, introduce pressure, ask questions, and allow the consequences of the players' decisions to shape the direction of play.

The game works best when approached collaboratively and fiction-first. Players are encouraged to take initiative, attempt risky actions, invent unusual solutions, and push the boundaries of what is possible through Sorcery, teamwork, and creativity. Your role is to support that momentum, not slow it down. When players attempt something bold or unexpected, focus first on whether it makes sense within the fiction rather than whether there is an explicit rule supporting it.

Players are responsible for initiating Throws. When a player attempts something dangerous, uncertain, or dramatically important, they describe what they are doing, how they are doing it, and which Skill and Attribute they believe applies. You then determine the stakes, opposition, and consequences surrounding the action. If failure would not meaningfully affect the Scene, allow the action to succeed without a Throw.

Failure is one of the primary engines that drives the game forward. Failed Throws should introduce complications, escalation, danger, or new situations rather than simply preventing progress. Combat may become more desperate, enemies may gain opportunities, important information may be lost, or the environment itself may change around the players. A failed Throw should alter the situation in an interesting way and force the players to adapt.

Combat should feel fast, dangerous, and cinematic. Encourage players to interact with the environment, combine their abilities, attempt risky manoeuvres, and describe their actions dramatically. Avoid treating combat like a slow tactical simulation unless the table specifically wants that style of play. Most enemies should be defeated quickly, but players should also understand that a few poor decisions or failed Throws can rapidly spiral into disaster.

Sorcery should feel expressive, strange, and powerful. Encourage players to describe how their Words of Power manifest, how their magic behaves, and what makes it unique to their character. Powerful Sorceries should feel memorable and significant, even when resolved with simple mechanics.

Sessions work best when focused around one or more clear goals, problems, or story beats. Players should usually leave a Session feeling that they accomplished something meaningful, learned something important, or changed the situation in a noticeable way. Keep the game moving forward by focusing on meaningful Scenes and decisions rather than unnecessary detail or simulation.

Above all else, your role is to keep the world reactive and the story moving. Present opportunities, introduce danger, escalate tension, reward creativity, and allow the consequences of the players' actions to naturally shape the unfolding narrative.
